Designing to a site's STRENGTHS

Whether it's a seemingly unmanageable ravine, protected wetlands, or a dramatic water feature, inspiration comes from walking a site and envisioning its full potential. What may appear as a difficult site or simply a couple "problems" can, in fact become the defining elements that contribute to your community's unique character and sense of place. See a couple examples that were successfully designed to a site's strength and transformed it into a unique experience.

Translating missions into a senior living community is at the essence of not-for-profit sponsors, but even more challenging when it's a faith-based community.

Faith-based organizations reflect a sense of spiritual purpose in their mission statements that often gets lost in the development process even though it's a fundamental value proposition. Faith-based sponsors involved in the development process are more likely to reflect the spiritual foundation of their mission in the final product.

Design THINKING and Operational EXCELLENCE

When the Harvard Business Review devotes an issue to "The Evolution of Design Thinking," it is more than a noteworthy trend, it's acclaimed as a dynamic framework for creative and strategic thinking adopted by corporate leaders. This was the catalyst inspiring EmpathCare Village, a new model of memory care for Miami Jewish Health that is more than traditional household design, but a much bigger vision of operational excellence rooted in a culture of empathy.
